

The Institute offers many teaching and learning programs to support faculty and graduate student instructors throughout the academic year. Here's what past participants had to say about three of these programs:

◆ New Instructor Orientation

"I saw (attending this workshop) as a crucial step before starting to work as an instructor/faculty member because I learned a lot about how to approach my course, how to make my plans, and how to structure my lectures."

"Good way to become better prepared to teach."

◆ Schreyer Institute Teaching Luncheons

"The topics are a great way to pull people together and provide them with a relaxed forum for sharing their ideas and experiences."

"The luncheons give me an opportunity to discuss teaching and learning issues with colleagues from other disciplines."

◆ Course in College Teaching

"This course got me excited about teaching again. I am looking forward to next semester."

"I found the course much more useful than I had anticipated, in part because of the open-ended activities which allowed each of us time to articulate and work with our own objectives and course philosophies, with some input."
